Edition of two and one artist's proof

Learning Curve (still point) is the second of two works that uses the model of a school chair with an attached desktop that curves around the body. Whereas the first incarnation, Learning Curve (1993), was made for right-handed people, this version is for the left-handed. Its slightly inclined bleached wood surface, looking something like the expanse of a beach, extends sixteen feet (4.9 meters) out into the distance, reaching an imaginary point of infinity. There at the end on the top surface, a small five-inch monitor displays the side view of a perfect wave throwing out its mass in a continual spiraling motion which enfolds upon itself as it remakes itself.
