SELF C, an exploded frustum of sorts, necessarily suggests, a little more commitment to see again what is seen (and how). This time three images take their turns stamping the singular display/viewfinder one by one—somewhere on the side of the head, the top of the head, and somewhere on the other side of the head. The self continues its de-centering and further evaporation. (See of SELF ( ) series here for a more thorough description of the interplay between the individual SELF components).
