Title:Disturbance (among the jars)

Date:1988

Media:Mixed media installation

Video Link :

Description:

Seven modified 27-inch color video monitors (cathode ray tubes removed from chassis), two painted MDF-board platforms, seven straight-back wooden chairs, two speakers, seven-channel synchronizer, seven laserdisc players and seven laserdiscs (color; one with stereo sound)

Dimensions variable; requiring two platforms (one including two stairs on either end that functions as a veranda) which measure 18 x 324 x 54 in. (45 x 822 x 137 cm.) each (the depth of the chair platform/veranda is variable)

Unique

Note: The work was commissioned directly from the artist by the Musée national d'art moderne, Centre Georges Pompidou, Paris, France, in 1988.

Disturbance (among the jars) is a multi-lingual adaptation of selected Gnostic texts from the Nag Hammadi library discovered in 1945/46. The structure of the piece is based around the metaphor of fragmentation, more specifically, that of a broken sentence reflecting the original condition of many of the texts. In a completely white room lit with several thousand watts of light, a veranda with seven straight-back wooden chairs faces a low pedestal of the same height on which seven 27-inch bare cathode ray tubes (display bulbs of video monitors) are positioned to form a fragmented line. The positions of the monitors can be seen in a multiplicity of ways. Monitors 1 and 2 on the far left are placed like an opened book and function as mirrors, dyads and doubles throughout the work. When not linked to the continuous "sentence" by the extended panorama, monitors 3, 4 and 5 in the middle can be seen as a triad and literally provide the possibility of the most continuous unbroken image. Monitor 6 is, as it were, broken off from the triad (the broken image; the broken word; the gap), but the position of the viewer closes the break, and a quaternion becomes present. Monitor 7 on the far right is the monad, the point of view or source.

The texts were reworked by the artist and, in many cases, by the performers – including actors, persons off the street, poets and writers – themselves. (For example, the sound poet Bernard Heidsieck created a sound text from The Holy Book of the Great Invisible Spirit, and the philosopher Jacques Derrida wove together lines and phrases from the Gospel of Thomas, ultimately appearing in a kind of cameo role as "The Philosopher.")

These performances, recorded in the same bright white light of the installation, are interwoven with landscapes from the Cathar country of France and are juxtaposed with encrusted texts that seemingly crawl "through" the video space of the seven monitors. This horizontal movement is further emphasized with the image of a large snake that appears to also pass through all of the monitors as it negotiates a number of pomegranates strewn across the floor space. As the snake makes its way, we hear a spoken text consisting of more than thirty different languages unfold.

Spoken Text:

The work is a multi-lingual adaptation of Gnostic texts unearthed in 1945 at Nag Hammadi, Egypt. Excerpts were adapted from the following texts:

The Gospel of Thomas

The Gospel of Truth

The Apocryphon of John

Authoritative Teaching

The Gospel of the Egyptians

On the Origin of the World

The Gospel of Mary

The Gospel of Philip

Trimorphic Protennoia

The Thunder, Perfect Mind
